"We're testing how to simulate movement in real-time on our game systems and see how players move on the pitch," said Domenico Crispolis, Global Brand Director at EA SPORTS. "We're testing the interaction between in-game body types and simulations. We're proving we can capture a whole range of players - how players move on the pitch, behave and how they move in and out of ball movement." The 24-player FIFA Ultimate Team will feature hyper-accurate dribbling animations powered by the team's in-game body movements. "FIFA is a game where the experience is everything," said Andrew Janjigian, Senior Producer at EA SPORTS. "It's being able to make sure that the physics, animations and controls are the very best they can be, as well as the game's overall realism. We're testing how far we can push the player personality. With FIFA Ultimate Team we have the ability to have more realism and a better AI in a way that adds another layer of game experience for players." "The FIFA series is a showcase for the sophistication and authenticity of sports simulation and has become a benchmark in the industry. This year we are delivering yet another feature that taps the full potential of the FIFA engine. Every new feature we add adds to the excitement and realism the FIFA series delivers," said David Rutter, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS.
